DIRECTOR'S NOTES

All of the characters in this play are actual people who once walked this earth, and some are more faithfully portrayed than others, but a historical re-enactment this is not, and was never intended to be. I am not a historian, and the assassination of Lincoln nor the end of the War Between the States has never been an event that I had much interest in, but the idea of this play was developed around a table at a friend's house who considers herself a historian (knowing what a giving and selfless person she is, she would only be embarrassed by the mention of her name, so I will refrain from that). In the beginning, I only superficially researched the characters so as to not feel constrained in their dramatization. What I have found interesting about the writing of this play, is how an initial idea can almost become lost as the play itself transforms during the many and endless revisions and how the characters almost demanded further inquiry. These people were intensely fascinating.

Most people would regard this play as a historical drama, but I have always seen it more as an allegory. One hundred and fifty years ago we were coming to the end of a divided nation with an immensely unpopular President hailing from Illinois. Sound familiar? "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it," as Santayana wrote. In 1865 half the states were complaining of federal overreach and fighting to deny civil rights to a class of people. Yet, here we are in the present day, and we still have states complaining of federal overreach. My home state of Alabama's Supreme Court has ordered its probate judges to defy a federal court order that it regards as federal overreach and in so doing they continue to deny a class of people their civil rights.

I think the most controversial person portrayed in this script is that of Mary Surratt, the first woman executed by the United States. The Mary Surratt seen this evening, however, is based more on my own mother, than the woman who was hanged. My mother was a woman who lived her life as she pleased. She was beholden to none, but loved by all. She experienced immense tragedies, but held her head high and continued moving forward. She worked herself to an early grave so that her sons would have the material things she did not have, and she loved us with a fierce and burning love that could be both freeing and suffocating. She had many regrets, but understood that regret would not change the past and she continually tried to look forward rather than behind. My greatest regret is that I did not let her read this play in its unfinished form.

I expected she would see it on stage, but one year ago she died, suddenly. It is because of her that this play is finished. In the past, I would have walked away from it because of the regret I felt regarding withholding it, but the lesson she taught to keep moving forward compelled me to continue.

There are many others who have inspired and nourished me and if it were not for them Witness would not be. My grandmother and mother gave me everything I needed, and more. My father is the only dad I will ever have. Jane Lindsley, my first drama teacher, gave me the tools to understand the theater and taught me how truly transcendent the stage can be. Buddy Manley, my first director as a professional, taught me the importance of the audience, and further built upon the strong foundation that Jane had begun. They were amazing mentors, but first and foremost, they were my friends. DD Andersen, the best friend a gay boy in Alabama could have ever had, and truly one of the most talented actors I have ever had the privilege to work with. Angela Gates Wilhite, a woman of impeccable taste and breeding and grantor of confidence when I needed it most. Paige Balitski, a visionary, a sounding board and a friend. Susan Shapiro, the lady that saved me when I felt most alone, and a person I know I can count on no matter what. The Board of Directors of Diva Theater for greenlighting this project and being welcoming to new talent and home to so many. Helen Lavelle and Lavelle Strategy Group for being a champion of this project and doing so much to make it a success. The entire cast and crew of Witness who have given so selflessly to make this script come to life, each and every one of you are amazingly talented, and I feel humbled to be in your presence.

It is my sincere hope that the many sponsors and advertisers understand my deep gratitude. This production has been made possible through your support. If it were not for individuals and organizations like you this world would be much worse off. You change lives!

James Cunha, my friend and my husband, you have given selflessly to make this happen. You are the hardest working man I know, and my life would not be what it is if you were not in it. There are not words capable of expressing my gratitude and love.

As stated, the play, Witness, is a work of fiction based on actual people, and in some cases uses the characters very own words, but not in an effort to recreate factual history.
